Dried Potators.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 16. During the last two months there has aprove up an extraordinary demand for dried potatoes, a new and highly valuable fond which has but recently come nto use in the United States. It is well known that apples, peaches, pears and other fruits have been successfully preserved by drying; also pumpkins, and a few other vegetables. But never, until the present season, has the potato the Bones, Side and Head, been treated in that manner. Such an way they first learned that potatoes could be preserved in that manner arose from to Russia, where they are immediately dried in order to prevent their freezing lts ingredients are so skilfully com-during the long and bitter cold Russian bined, that the full alterative effect of owing to the war in that country and Turkey, but a very small crop of potatoes was raised, and the presence of the armies drove so many people temporathem from drying their usual winter store of its of potatoes. This fact becoming known to the exporters of grain and potatoes, steps were successfully taken to supply the foreign demand for them, and merpotatoes." Just as they would dry their apples or peaches, by paring and slicing them and stringing them, or drying them in an oven, as suited them. The farms ers throughout the country have done so cheerfully, and are finding a ready market for them is all the principal cities of the United States at three dollars per bushel. It only takes about eleven pecks of raw potatoes to make one bushel of dried potatoes. It will thus be seen that in the difference in price between the raw and the dried article there is sufficient to fully compensate the farmer for his labor to drying them, and farmers throughout

Fall Planting.

Fruit-bearing trees, shrubs, vines, and brambles may be transplanted in the fall, and very often under more favorable conditions, and with better prospects of success, than if set out in the spring. There are some well --- Mason & Hamlin-known objections raised against fell planting, especially of fruit trees, such as the long exposure to the swaying of the winds before growth commences. But the injury or displaceHAMLIN ORGAN CO., Boston, New York, or

But the injury or displacement of the roots from swaying at the tops amount to little compared to the many striking advantages gained in planting at a season of the year when there is comparativelyleisure, when the there is comparativelyleisure, when the ground is dry and in good condition, and when the necessary preparatory stirring of the soil can be madewithout stirring of the soil can be madewithout any extra expense. These are points that tell in the growth and productiveness of fruit trees, either in the garden or orchard. If planted in the fall, the soil settles closely around the roots and fibers by the time the spring opens, and an earlier growth is started than with the spring setting, which is often with the spring setting, which is often pushed back until the season is well ndvanced, from causes over which the planter has no control. The spring may be backward enough to hinder planting of trees in a way in which planting of trees in a way in which they should be set out to insure sucthere is no doubt that spring would be a better time to plant trees. The only branch of labor which is not overdoneand which offers independence and fairly remunerative reward for toil and economy, is that of the farm. But it is not attractive. Those out of work in the cities and towns don't want to go to the farm. The n40.4 most of them would rather live on charity and squalor than try to make a living by cultivating the earth. They are infatuated with the sights and sounds and dissipations of city life.

There is room in the Northwest for farmers and farm hands; there are thousands of comfortable homes for men and women, and for families on the farms of the West, Northwest and Southwest.
